I. Qualifications and Experience

1. I am a visiting researcher and an incoming Assistant Professor of Computer Science at Dartmouth College. I will begin my appointment in July 2026. I received my Ph.D. in Computer Science from the University of Chicago in 2025. I also received Master of Science and Bachelor of Science degrees in Computer Science from the University of Chicago.

2. My research examines the technical foundations of artificial intelligence ("AI") systems, with a focus on evaluating their behavior, identifying limitations, and developing methods for AI security and accountability. My work involves deep technical investigations into generative models and their interaction with training data. My specific contributions include the following:

i. Analyzing Model Behavior and Provenance: Investigating the ability to identify the provenance of generative AI models and developing techniques to distinguish human-generated content from AI-generated content. I have also studied internal model phenomena, such as understanding "implosion" in the attention layers of generative models.

ii. Developing Defensive Mechanisms: Leading the creation of Glaze, a tool that applies small, targeted perturbations to content to disrupt the ability of AI models to learn styles from training data.

iii. Analyzing AI Data Ecosystem: I also study the efficacy of methods content creators can use to manage and control AI crawler access to their works, for example, through protocols like robots.txt.

iv. Other AI Security Research: My work extends to other areas of AI security, including protecting personal privacy against deep learning models (Fawkes), methods for identifying and mitigating unusual behavior in neural networks (Neural Cleanse), and developing defenses against query-based black-box attacks (Blacklight).

3. I have authored 18 peer reviewed publications on various subjects within computer science, including numerous articles on AI-related topics. They have garnered roughly 3,800 citations. I have also given numerous invited talks at conferences and symposia.

4. My expertise in AI data acquisition is reflected in, among other places, my recent publication, "Somesite I Used To Crawl: Awareness, Agency and Efficacy in Protecting Content Creators From AI Crawlers."[1] This work provides one of the first comprehensive technical analyses of the "crawling" infrastructure used by AI companies to scrape training data from the internet. In this study, my team and I conducted a longitudinal analysis of over 50,000 popular websites to measure the adoption of robots.txt protocols designed to manage AI crawlers. I performed both passive and active technical measurements to determine which commercial AI crawlers respect these blocking directives and which ignore them. This work directly informs my understanding of how AI models ingest data and the technical measures available to control that ingestion.

5. My research also extensively examines the security and robustness of AI models against adversarial exploitation, providing me with the technical expertise to evaluate the efficacy of "guardrails" and safety filters. I have authored multiple peer-reviewed studies on identifying and mitigating vulnerabilities where actors attempt to manipulate model behavior or bypass intended restrictions. For instance, my work on "Blacklight" developed scalable defenses against "query-based black-box attacks," where an outsider attempts to extract information or manipulate a model solely through its inputs and outputs. Similarly, my research on "Neural Cleanse" (one of the most cited publications in AI security with over 2100 citations) focused on identifying "backdoors" and hidden vulnerabilities in neural networks. This background is directly relevant to my inspection of Anthropic's "Content Compare System" and "Prompt Shield" systems, among other issues.

6. I am a member of the Glaze Project at the University of Chicago. The Project develops tools that assist various creators in protecting their work from unauthorized exploitation by generative AI. To date, the Glaze Project has developed several technologies primarily designed to protect visual arts, including Glaze, WebGlaze, and others. All of our tools are free for use by artists.

7. My AI-related work and research has been featured in major news outlets, including The New York Times, BBC, The Wall Street Journal, and NPR. I have received numerous awards in connection with my work, including Forbes 30 Under 30, the MIT Technology Review Innovator of the Year, and MIT Technology Review 35 Innovators Under 35. My research has also earned the USENIX Internet Defense Prize and several Distinguished Paper Awards at top conferences.

8. I have extensive experience with code as a software engineer. Over the course of my academic and industry career, I have written, reviewed, and debugged tens of thousands of lines of code related to AI systems, including large-scale data collection and preprocessing, model training pipelines, evaluation and debugging workflows, inference systems, and safety and guardrail mechanisms. I have trained and evaluated over 2,000 AI models across a range of architectures and applications, including image classifiers, text-to-image diffusion models, large language models ("LLMs"), and malware detection systems. I am involved in the DARPA GARD (Guaranteeing AI Robustness Against Deception) program as a primary evaluator, where I review and test research teams' AI models and systems for robustness and failure modes. I also regularly review and evaluate code written by others, including mentoring undergraduate and graduate students on research and course projects by reviewing their code for correctness, efficiency, reproducibility, and security, and providing technical guidance on software design and implementation.

9. I previously worked at Meta from June 2019 to August 2019 and June 2020 to August 2020, where I was responsible for analyzing AI models in production and training pipelines in the context of protecting Meta platforms from malicious scraping. The models I trained at Meta were not LLMs, but more traditional machine learning classifiers, which are discriminative AI models designed to categorize inputs into predefined labels (e.g., "malicious" or "benign"), as opposed to generative models like LLMs that synthesize new content by predicting and assembling sequences of text. The data used in those training pipelines were comprised of non-copyrighted material. In that capacity, I trained AI models and wrote thousands of lines of code that were deployed into production. Specifically, I was a member of Meta's Privacy team, which focused on protecting user privacy on the platform.

10. A detailed curriculum vitae showing my qualifications, experience, publications, awards and patents is attached to this report as Exhibit A. I have not testified as an expert at trial or by deposition in any other cases in the previous four years.

11. I am being compensated for my time in this matter at a rate of $700 per hour. My compensation is not contingent on my opinions or the outcome of this lawsuit.

II. Assignment

12. I have been retained by the law firm of Oppenheim + Zebrak, LLP on behalf of Concord Music Group, Inc. ("Concord"); Capitol CMG, Inc., Universal Music Corp., Songs of Universal, Inc., Universal Music – MGB NA LLC, Polygram Publishing, Inc., Universal Music – Z Tunes LLC ("collectively UMPG"); and ABKCO Music, Inc. ("ABKCO") (collectively, all plaintiffs are referred to as "Publishers") as an independent expert witness related to Publishers' lawsuit against Anthropic PBC ("Anthropic").

13. Counsel for Publishers asked me to conduct a series of inspections of certain source code and datasets relating to Anthropic's "Claude" AI models that Anthropic made available for inspection as part of this litigation. As part of these inspections, I was asked to analyze this data and report on my observations regarding, among other things, (1) the composition and content of the datasets used to train Anthropic's AI models, including the presence of Plaintiffs' Works in Suit (the 499 works identified in Exhibit A to Publishers' First Amended Complaint, ECF No. 337-1) (hereinafter "Works in Suit") in those training datasets; (2) the technical methods Anthropic uses to process, filter, and weigh this data during the training pipeline; and (3) the design, implementation, and efficacy of Anthropic's so-called "guardrail" systems (such as "Content Compare System" and "Prompt Shield").

14. To perform this inspection and analysis, I relied on my knowledge, expertise, and research as a computer scientist working with AI systems and training data, as detailed above.

15. Between now and such time that I may be asked to testify, I may review any expert reports submitted by Anthropic's expert(s) or other experts in this case. I reserve the right to revise or update this report, or prepare any additional report, as necessary and as acceptable to the Court.

III. Information Considered

16. In forming my opinions expressed herein and preparing this report, I have reviewed and relied upon the sources that I discuss in the following paragraphs and in the attached exhibits, as well as in the list of materials attached as Exhibit B.

17. My opinions are based on my review of the aforementioned information and documents, research and analysis conducted by me, and my experience, education, training, skill, and knowledge in the fields mentioned above.

IV. Background

A. Overview of AI Model Training

18. I set forth below a brief overview of what technologies and processes underpin LLMs, including Claude, and how such LLMs are trained.

19. Text-generative LLMs like Claude are a class of generative AI that are trained on and mimic natural human language in their written outputs.[2] A more detailed description of the training process can be found in the Expert Report of Dr. Ben Zhao, dated December 19, 2025 (the "Zhao Report"). Broadly speaking, generative AI refers to AI systems that analyze existing data, such as audio, images, or text, and generate content based on learned patterns derived from the datasets they are trained on. Specifically, LLMs like Claude analyze the statistical relationship or conditional probability of tokenized words and phrases and are taught to generate written outputs based on preceding context.[3] In the case of LLMs like Claude, the outputs are texts that appear natural and coherent, generated in response to human inputs.

20. The first step of LLM development is referred to as "training," which occurs in two distinct phases: "pre-training" and "finetuning" (also called "post-training"). Pre-training consists of feeding the LLM a large corpus of training materials (the "training corpus") and training it to predict the next token in a given string. Finetuning consists of training the LLM to do specific tasks, often under a supervised learning process. During both stages, human intervention is required. During pre-training and finetuning, the developer must curate the datasets to feed the LLM. During finetuning, the developer also needs to (1) identify the tasks they want the LLM to perform, (2) annotate examples of correct outputs, (3) evaluate the LLM's behavior, (4) reward the model (if employing Reinforcement Learning from Human Feedback finetuning methods), and (5) validate the LLM's performance.[4]

21. A large and diverse training corpus exposes the LLM to a variety of language patterns, allowing the LLM to learn from and model diverse sentence structures, topics, grammar, and other nuances. Training on diverse datasets provides models with more complete and comprehensive probabilities for different token patterns representing data and information in different contexts, which generally lead to more flexible, useful, and coherent outputs. Larger training corpora also help LLMs generalize across data in different training datasets.[5] Consequently, LLM developers like Anthropic seek to train LLMs like Claude on a vast training corpus of human-written texts, often comprised of terabytes or petabytes of data and hundreds of billions or trillions of tokens.

22. However, to acquire these sufficiently large training corpora, developers often turn to a massive source of easily accessible text: the Internet. Developers typically source large portions of their training corpora by scraping text from webpages,[6] a process by which bots "crawl" through the internet and copy the contents of webpages it encounters.[7] Developers may also acquire datasets constructed by third parties, such as "Common Crawl,"[8] "The Pile,"[9] and "OpenWebText2,"[10] which are themselves largely comprised of petabytes of content scraped from the Internet. Developers may also enter into licenses with rights holders or data aggregators for their library of content, including creative content such as books, magazines, music, and code.

23. Web crawling is an automated process by which bots copy the contents of webpages they come across on the Internet. However, crawling is not always an indiscriminate process. Crawlers may be given instructions to prioritize scraping from certain websites over others; developers may choose to scrape specific domains or webpages depending on their data needs and goals.[11] Crawlers may also be programmed to review a webpage's robots.txt file before it begins scraping. If a webpage's owner does not wish for crawlers to scrape from their website, they may include "do not crawl" instructions (i.e., Robots Exclusion Protocol) in the robots.txt file.[12] Crawlers may or may not obey those instructions, depending on how they are programmed.[13]

B. Case Background

24. I set forth below various allegations that the parties in this case have asserted. I include these allegations merely as context for my analysis.

25. Publishers are among the world's leading music publishers. Publishers own and control the rights to various copyrighted musical compositions, including the 499 Works in Suit.[14]

26. Anthropic is an AI company that develops and sells a series of commercial LLMs known as "Claude."[15]

27. Publishers allege, among other things, that Anthropic has collected massive amounts of text from the internet, both by scraping webpages and using existing datasets like Common Crawl and the Pile, as input to train Anthropic's Claude models.[16] Publishers allege that this data includes the lyrics to every one of the 499 Works in Suit.[17]

28. Publishers allege that Anthropic has infringed their copyrighted song lyrics through its AI models, by copying those lyrics both as the input to train its AI models and in the output those models generate, without Publishers' permission.[18] In particular, Publishers allege that Anthropic infringes their copyrighted lyrics by reproducing these works multiple times over in its AI training datasets and as part of its AI models, and by reproducing, distributing, displaying, and preparing derivative works based on these works as the output of its AI models.[19]

29. Publishers allege that before they filed their original complaint in this case on October 18, 2023, Anthropic had made little or no effort to prevent the output of Publishers' works. In particular, Publishers allege that before they filed suit, Anthropic had implemented only the most limited and ineffective guardrails in its AI models.[20]

30. Anthropic claims that it has implemented three systems, or "guardrails," to prevent the output of copyrighted information by its AI models:

i. "Constitutional Copyright Principle," first implemented in [redacted] which is part of Claude's finetuning and which Anthropic contends is designed to "prevent the model from substantially reproducing copyrighted content."[21]

ii. "Prompt Shield," which Anthropic describes as an intervention tool that will append a request not visible to the end user at the end of a prompt to be "careful not to substantially reproduce copyrighted content when responding."[22] Anthropic reports that it first implemented Prompt Shield for Claude.ai and its first-party API product on or around [redacted][23]

iii. "Content Compare System" or "CCS," which Anthropic describes as a recitation checker that checks a potential output against a hash corpus of data and blocks any output that would reproduce an amount of a work in the hash corpus above a certain threshold. Anthropic states that it "added the [redacted] to CCS's hash corpus" on [redacted], and that Anthropic separately added "[redacted] to CCS's hash corpus" in [redacted].[24]

31. Publishers allege that Anthropic intentionally removes or alters copyright management information from Publishers' musical compositions, and distributes Publishers' works or copies of Publishers' works knowing that copyright management information has been removed or altered, all without Publishers' authorization.[25]

C. Inspection Process and Environment

32. I performed three source code and data inspections of Anthropic's AI models, on September 9-11, 2025, October 2-3, 2025 and October 29, 2025, at Anthropic's office at 394 Pacific Avenue, San Francisco.

33. The inspections were conducted pursuant to the Joint Stipulation Regarding Training Data and Source Code Inspection Protocol in this case (ECF No. 386) ("Inspection Protocol"). As specified in the Inspection Protocol, the inspection environment consisted of two computers in a secure room with no internet connectivity. The first computer connected to a cloud-based storage system hosted by Amazon Web Services containing certain software code and datasets previously requested by Publishers. It was equipped with various Python packages necessary to review that material. Pursuant to the Inspection Protocol, Publishers were permitted with sufficient notice to request and/or supply particular code and files to be made available on this computer for use during the inspection.

34. The second computer supplied by Anthropic in the inspection environment was an iPad with basic functionality that permitted limited note taking. Pursuant to the Inspection Protocol, Publishers were permitted to request electronic copies (referred to as "print requests" in the Inspection Protocol) of limited portions of the code and data, as well as copies of any notes taken on the second computer. If the print request was acceptable to Anthropic, the requested material was produced to Publishers by Anthropic after each inspection concluded.

35. Prior to the first inspection, I requested through Publishers' counsel that Anthropic provide the follow materials to aid my work:

[25] FAC at ¶¶ 17, 58, 68, 72.

i. An AWS ["Amazon Web Service"] EC2 instance with at least 64 GB RAM, 16+ CPU cores, and 512 GB local storage, connected to an S3 bucket containing the inspection data.

ii. Installation of Python 3.10 or later, along with necessary Python packages for reading and analyzing the data (pyarrow, pandas, numpy, gzip, regex, or any other packages required to read the data).

36. Anthropic confirmed that it would supply the python3 Ubuntu package (at version 3.10.6) and the Python packages pyarrow, pandas, numpy, and regex at the latest versions published to PyPI. I also requested that Anthropic allow our automated script to run for up to five days after the onsite inspection, with the script appending records to a text file that would be submitted for a print request. Anthropic confirmed that it would not interfere with any programs left running for a reasonable period of time. Finally, as permitted by the Inspection Protocol, I sent to Anthropic through Publishers' counsel several text files containing the lyrics to the Works in Suit as well as certain other compositions owned by Publishers, and software code I had written to search for these songs in the training data.

37. During the inspection, Anthropic made available training data corresponding to Claude models from Claude 1 through 3.7 Sonnet (inclusive). This training data was organized into a series of distinct folders, each containing compressed data files. The folders themselves did not always bear self-explanatory names. Anthropic also provided a digital "inventory" mapping file on the inspection computer that correlated specific dataset folders to specific Claude models. This mapping allowed me to distinguish which datasets—ranging from clearly labeled public crawls (e.g., [redacted]") to internal designations (e.g., [redacted]")—were utilized for which models. I reviewed this inventory to confirm the association between the data and the models; however, Anthropic made clear that this inventory list would not be produced or printed from the secure environment.

38. During the first inspection, I determined that the AWS computer was insufficiently powered with 16 CPU and my scripts would take nearly two weeks to complete. At my request, Anthropic subsequently replaced this computer for one with 64 CPU.

39. The environment during my next two inspections was identical to the first inspection apart from additional text files I sent to Anthropic to be made available for reference during the inspections. Anthropic also made additional Claude code and data available during the subsequent inspections pursuant to negotiation between counsel.

V. Summary of Opinions

40. As a result of my analysis of the source code, training datasets, and other information to date, and as described in greater depth in the next section, my opinions in this matter include the following:

i. Anthropic copied every one of Publishers' 499 Works in Suit in connection with training its Claude AI models, each of them many times over; each Work in Suit was copied at least 10 times. My inspection of Anthropic's training data confirmed the presence of all 499 Works in Suit in that training data. Specifically, I identified [redacted] matches to the lyrics of the 499 Works in Suit within the dataset. After removing duplicates, this corresponds to [redacted] unique webpages hosted in Anthropic's training corpus that contain lyrics to the Works in Suit.

ii. The scale of Anthropic's use of the Works in Suit for AI training is expanding rather than contracting. Based on my automated search script detailed below, the latest model subject to my inspection, Claude 3.7 Sonnet, was overwhelmingly likely to have been trained on larger datasets with more copies of Works in Suit than earlier models.

iii. Anthropic's "guardrail" systems reveal additional use of Publishers' Works in Suit and other musical compositions owned by Publishers and other copyright holders through Anthropic's internal guardrail system (referenced in code as "Copyfairy" or "CCS"). The existence of these specific checklists is consistent with Anthropic's understanding the risk of reproducing these specific copyrighted works.

iv. Anthropic explicitly prioritizes and highly values English text—including lyrics—over other data types during training. Anthropic's system configuration assigns specific "weights" to different data categories to influence the model's learning. Based on my inspection, it appears that English data—which encompasses the lyrics found in the training set—is assigned a weight of [redacted]

VI. Works in Suit Examination and Methodology

41. To examine and analyze the presence of the Works in Suit in Claude's training data, I developed and executed a Python script designed to scan Anthropic's massive training datasets for the Works in Suit and associated Copyright Management Information (CMI). This Python script is attached hereto as Exhibit C. The methodology proceeded in two technical phases:

42. Preparation of Reference Data (The "Fingerprints"): First, I ingested the text files containing the lyrics for all 499 Works in Suit provided by Counsel, which I understand match the "genuine lyrics" to those works as reflected in Exhibit B to Publishers' First Amended Complaint, ECF No. 337-2. I converted these lyrics into a set of "phrases" to create a digital fingerprint for each song. To ensure accuracy and reduce false positives, I applied a specific text-processing steps:

i. Normalization: All text was converted to lowercase and split into a set of individual lyrics (one line of the lyrics) referred to as a "segment."

ii. Filtering: I filtered out extremely short or extremely long segments (keeping only those between 2 and 30 words) and removed non-alphabetic characters from the segments.

iii. Common Phrase Exclusion: I utilized a "stop list" to exclude common segments that might appear across the web but are not unique to the lyrics (e.g., common English phrases such as "one two three four", "no no no no no", or "oh oh oh oh"), ensuring that matches were based on unique lyrical content. I built this list of common phrases by finding the top 50 most common phrases from the list of 499 Works in Suit.

iv. At the end, each song lyrics had a unique "fingerprint," which is a set of normalized segments consisting of English words.

43. Search and Matching Algorithm: Second, I then ran this script across Anthropic's training data repositories that were made available: the datasets for multiple Claude models, including Claude 1, 1.1, 1.2, 1.3, 2, 2.1, 3 (including Sonnet, Opus, and Haiku), 3.5 (including Sonnet, Opus, and Haiku) were produced for inspection on September 10, 2025, with additional specific Claude Sonnet 3.7 data produced for the second inspection on October 2, 2025. Because the dataset is too large to scan linearly for every song, I used a targeted "triage" approach followed by a deep verification:

i. Domain Filtering: The script first prioritized records where the URL in metadata contains known lyric-hosting domains (e.g., genius.com, azlyrics.com, musixmatch.com, music.apple.com) and any URL containing the word "lyric" at any part of the URL.

ii. Token Intersection Matching: For records that passed through the domain filter (i.e., records that have URL metadata containing known lyric-hosting domains or URL containing the word "lyric"), the script calculated the overlap between the text in the training data and the "fingerprints" of the Works in Suit. To ensure this process is reproducible and precise, I employed a deterministic set-intersection method defined by the following steps. First, I processed both the original lyrics and the training data using the identical normalization function discussed above. This function converted all text to lowercase, removed non-alphabetic characters (such as punctuation), and split the text into individual segments. This standardization ensures that identical lyrical content is mapped to the same canonical form, allowing the algorithm to correctly identify matches despite minor variations such as missing punctuation, differing capitalization, or irregular whitespace. Additionally, to minimize noise, I retained only those segments containing between 2 and 30 words and not appearing on the "stop list" identified above. Then a match was positively identified only if the intersection of the unique sentences in the training data file and the unique sentences in the Work in Suit met both of the following strict quantitative thresholds:

a. Matching Threshold: A file was counted as a match only if it met two clear requirements. First, the file had to contain at least 3 different lyric segments from the relevant Work in Suit, and each of those segments had to match the original lyrics exactly, character-for-character, after applying the normalization process described above. Second, those matching segments had to represent more than 50% of all the unique lyric segments in the original song. This second requirement ensures that the match reflects copying of most of the song's lyrics, rather than a short quotation, a repeated chorus, or an isolated excerpt.

b. Manual Verification: To further validate the accuracy of the automated matching process, I performed a manual review of the results. I randomly selected and visually inspected 20 detected matches from the dataset and confirmed that in every instance, the text identified by the script was indeed a copy of the corresponding Works in Suit. I also specifically targeted the 20 matches with the lowest match ratios (i.e., those closest to the 50% threshold). My inspection confirmed that these were also correct matches. The fact that the match ratio was less than 100% in these instances was attributable to formatting differences or textual variants (e.g., ad-libs, intro/outro text differences) that were not fully standardized by the normalization function, rather than being false positives.

VII. Analysis and Opinions

D. Examination of Training Datasets

44. I understand that Publishers allege and that discovery produced by Anthropic during this case has shown that Anthropic trains its Claude AI models using certain datasets—including Common Crawl, OpenWebText2, The Pile, YouTube Subtitles, and Reddit data—that contain Publishers' lyrics.[26] The findings of my inspection, as described below, support that conclusion.

45. During my inspection of Anthropic's training data repositories, I identified several distinct categories of data used to train Anthropic's Claude models. I navigated the file directory structure of Anthropic's training data repositories and observed that the folder names in those repositories identified in general terms the source and nature of the data contained within. To verify the reliability of these labels, I opened and examined ten random samples from folder with names that indicates hosting possible lyrics. In every instance, the content of the files was consistent with the dataset label on the folder. During the inspection I also examined the data mapping code, which indicates which Claude models were trained on which datasets. Because Anthropic objected to producing a copy of the mapping code, I do not describe with specificity herein what datasets are associated with particular Claude models. However, based on my inspection and analysis of Anthropic's training data, as well as the other discovery produced by Anthropic during this case regarding its training datasets,[27] and because all Claude models rely on significant amounts of training data, I believe every Claude model relevant to this case for which Anthropic made training data available for inspection was trained on all or most of the following datasets:[28]

i. Common Crawl: [redacted] of the training data consists of "Common Crawl" data. Common Crawl is a collection of website crawls from 2008 to the present, including raw web pages as well as corresponding metadata and text extractions. My inspection revealed that Anthropic has collected Common Crawl data [redacted] Common Crawl collected these data from 2014 to 2024. This dataset represents a massive, indiscriminate scrape of the public web.

ii. OpenWebText2: I identified folders containing "OpenWebText2," another well-known dataset used for AI training derived from Reddit submissions.

iii. The Pile: I observed folders labeled "pile," which refers to "The Pile," a large-scale, open-source dataset commonly used for LLM training.[29] According to the creators of The Pile, it is "composed of 22 diverse and high-quality datasets, including both established natural language processing datasets and several newly introduced ones."[30] The datasets contained in The Pile include, among other datasets, "Pile-CC" (a "Common Crawl-based dataset"), "Books3" ("a dataset of books derived from a copy of the contents of the Bibliotik private tracker"), OpenWebText2 ("a generalized web scrape dataset . . . includ[ing] more recent content from Reddit

[28] This conclusion is also confirmed by information obtained in discovery including Anthropic's response to Publishers' Interrogatory No. 6 (in which it identified Common Crawl, YouTube subtitles, and Reddit data as the most prevalent sources of lyrics in the training data) and Anthropic's response to Publishers' Requests for Admission No. 30 (in which it admitted that at least one commercially released Claude model was trained on data from versions of the Pile). See Anthropic's Amended and Supplemental Response to Plaintiffs' Interrogatory No. 6, dated Oct. 9, 2025 at 2; Anthropic's Amended Responses and Objections to Plaintiffs' First Set of Requests for Admissions, dated Sept. 18, 2025, at 31–32.

submissions up until 2020"), and "YouTube Subtitles" (a "corpus of text gathered from human generated closed captions on YouTube").[31]

iv. YouTube Data: I found separate data labeled as "YouTube data." Upon inspecting the sample files, I confirmed that this data consists of text transcriptions of videos.

v. Reddit Data: I identified separate folders containing data scraped from the social media platform Reddit.

vi. News Articles: I identified several folders explicitly containing news articles with the name "cc_news," which is referring to Common Crawl subset of news articles that were put together by Common Crawl.

vii. Source Code Data: I identified a specific subset of data consisting of source code, which contains the name "code" in the file name.

46. My findings regarding Anthropic's use of the datasets above to train its Claude AI models are consistent with various Anthropic deposition testimony, documents produced as part of this litigation, and other discovery in this case.[32]

E. Analysis of Presence of Copies of Works in Suit in Training Data

47. I understand that Publishers allege that Anthropic trains its Claude AI models using training data that included copies of the lyrics to Publishers' works, including in particular Publishers' 499 Works in Suit.[33]

48. My inspections, and my opinions based on those inspections, confirm the presence of Publishers' 499 Works in Suit within Anthropic's training data. Specifically, I identified copies of every one of the 499 Works in Suit in the Claude training dataset, with the large majority of those works appearing over a thousand times each on the training data.

49. In total, I identified at least [redacted] instances where Publishers' 499 Works in Suit appear in the training data. Even after removing duplicates where the same webpage was scraped multiple times, I identified [redacted] unique webpages across [redacted] domains containing the lyrics to Publishers' 499 Works in Suit. The largest number of matches corresponded to the Common Crawl dataset. The frequency of reproduction is high, with many specific Works in Suit appearing thousands of times in the training data. For example, 354 Works in Suit appear more than [redacted] times each, 79 Works in Suit appear more than [redacted] times each, and 19 Works in Suit appear over [redacted] times each. I have attached as Exhibit D a chart detailing the number of copies of each Work in Suit and the URLs containing each Work in Suit with the highest match scores I identified in Anthropic's training data.

50. Given the nature of Anthropic's data and the way in which I designed my searches to avoid false positives (as described above), these figures are certain to be underinclusive. The automated search was limited to domains known to host song lyrics and to URLs containing the term "lyric." This scope limitation was driven by practical constraints, including the sheer size of the dataset, limited available hardware and compute resources, and the inspection timeframe. Expanding the search to the full corpus would almost certainly identify a substantial number of additional matches.

51. To determine the primary sources of Publishers' Works in Suit within Anthropic's training data, I performed a quantitative analysis of the source URLs associated with the matched content. I utilized a programmatic approach to extract, parse, and aggregate the domain metadata for every confirmed match identified in my previous inspection. This process followed three specific steps:

i. URL Extraction: First, for every instance where a Work in Suit was positively identified in the training dataset, I extracted the corresponding raw URL from the data's metadata.

52. Domain Parsing: To ensure that the counts reflect unique websites rather than specific sub-pages, I parsed each raw URL to isolate its network location. I utilized a standard URL parsing algorithm (specifically the urllib.parse library) to strip away protocol prefixes (e.g., "http://") and specific file paths, leaving only the root domain name (e.g., converting http://www.lyricsfreak.com/h/hello.html to lyricsfreak.com).

ii. Aggregation: I then aggregated the data to calculate the total frequency of each unique domain. I tallied the number of times each domain appeared as the source for a Work in Suit. I filtered out invalid or empty domain records and ranked the remaining domains by frequency to identify the top ten most prolific sources of the Plaintiffs' lyrics.

53. My analysis revealed that a disproportionately large number of the Publishers' Works in Suit found in Anthropic's training data were copied from a relatively small number of lyric websites. The top 10 lyric websites where Publishers' Works in Suit included in Anthropic's training data appeared, and their respective match counts, are listed below:

Lyric Website	Number of copies of lyrics to Works in Suit in Anthropic training data
lyricsfreak.com	[redacted] lyrics.com
lyricsmode.com
stlyrics.com
lyricstranslate.com
sing365.com
elyrics.net
lyrics-video-music.blogspot.com
lyrics.net

54. Certain of these websites (such as pages from Lyricsfreak.com, Lyrics.com, and Lyricsmode.com displaying a specific Work in Suit, for example) indicate on their face that they are sublicensees of LyricFind.com,[34] which I understand, based on the report of Publishers' expert Prof. Michael D. Smith, that Publishers have licensed to display their lyrics online (including the right to sublicense). Content copied from other of Publishers' licensees referenced in Prof. Smith's report, such as Genius.com [redacted] of copies of the Works in Suit found) and Musixmatch.com [redacted] of copies of the Works in Suit found), also appears in Anthropic's training data.

VIII. Additional Lyrics Examination

55. During my second inspection on October 2-3, 2025, I performed a similar search for additional lyrics owned by Publishers that counsel explained were not among the 499 Works in Suit. Specifically, I was provided by Counsel three .zip files containing lyrics for Publishers Concord (1,672 songs), UMPG (4,436 songs), and ABKCO (784 songs). I performed a search for these songs in the Claude training data using the methodology described above for the Works in Suit. I concluded that of the 1,672 Concord songs, [redacted] were found in the training data. Of the 4,436 UMPG songs, [redacted] were found in the training data. Of the 784 ABKCO songs, [redacted] were found in the training data. In other words, [redacted] out of the 6,892 works—or [redacted]—for which I searched were found in the training data. These results are attached as Exhibit E. From these results, I conclude that Anthropic copied and included in its training data a large percentage of all works owned by Publishers, beyond just the 499 Works in Suit discussed in more detail above.

IX. Copyright Management Information Examination

56. I understand that Publishers allege that when they license their lyrics to lyric websites, those websites are typically required to identify such lyrics with Copyright Management Information ("CMI") such as the song title, songwriter name(s), and other important identifying information. I also understand that Publishers allege that, when Anthropic copies the lyrics to Publishers' Works in Suit for AI training, it removes or alters this CMI in the process of copying, cleaning, and filtering copies of Publishers' Works in Suit and in the output those AI models generate.[35]

57. To determine the extent to which Anthropic's training data retained Plaintiffs' CMI, at least initially, I designed and executed a programmatic search algorithm across the dataset. The methodology consisted of the following four steps:

i. Targeted Dataset Filtering: I restricted my search to the subset of the Anthropic training data where the source URL indicated the possible presence of lyrics. Consistent with the methodology described in Paragraphs 50–51, I selected records where: (1) the URL metadata matched a set of known lyric-hosting domains (e.g., genius.com, azlyrics.com); or (2) the string "lyric" appeared anywhere within the URL.

ii. Text Normalization: I first processed the raw text from the training files by converting all characters to lowercase. This ensured that the search was case-insensitive, allowing the system to identify Plaintiffs' names (e.g., "Concord" vs. "concord") regardless of capitalization inconsistencies in the raw web data.

iii. Symbol Detection Filter: To efficiently target relevant data, I first filtered the dataset to identify text blocks containing standard copyright indicators. I specifically scanned for the presence of the Unicode characters \u00A9 (the standard copyright symbol ©) and \u2117 (the sound recording copyright symbol ℗).

iv. Plaintiff Identification: For every text block confirmed to contain a copyright symbol, I executed a targeted search to identify the Plaintiffs' specific names. I utilized a precise text-matching technique (known technically as "Regular Expressions") to scan the content. In this context, to "detect" means the software searched for any text string that contained the exact sequence of characters for the following entities: "concord music," "capitol," "universal music," "polygram," or "abkco." Crucially, I applied a "whole word" constraint to this search. This ensured that the system would only report a match if the name appeared as a complete, distinct word (e.g., correctly matching "Capitol"), while automatically rejecting cases where those letters were merely a fragment hidden within a longer, unrelated word (e.g., ignoring "Capitol" if it appeared inside the word "Capitoline").

58. My analysis identified a massive volume of copyright symbols linked to names associated with Publishers within Anthropic's training data. The results, broken down Publisher, and appended as Exhibit F are as follows:

Keywords corresponding to Publishers	Number of copyright symbol matches
"Universal Music"	[redacted]
"Capitol"	[redacted]
"Concord"	[redacted]
"ABKCO"	[redacted]
"Polygram"	[redacted]

59. In my opinion, these findings confirm that the raw training data ingested by Anthropic contained explicit copyright management information identifying the relevant rights holders. In the raw data files I inspected, the "©" and "℗" symbols and accompanying text remained intact. While the precise figures in the table above are likely to be overinclusive in certain respects and underinclusive in other respects, based on the nature of Anthropic's data and the limitations of my searches, the results nevertheless reflect that the initial copies of many of the Works in Suit in the training data included this type of CMI. While Anthropic may attempt to trim or process this text in later pipeline stages, the training data as acquired and stored definitively includes these copyright notices. To the extent Anthropic's AI models later generated output containing Publishers' lyrics without this corresponding CMI (as reflected in the specific Claude output records described in more detail in the reports of Publishers' experts Joshua Dennis and Robert Leonard, and as reflected in Ex. B to Publishers' First Amended Complaint and in various Claude output records produced by Anthropic), such CMI was removed from the copies of Publishers' lyrics later in the process of Anthropic's AI training or in the process of generating output based on the training data.

X. Guardrail Examination

60. As discussed above, I understand that Anthropic has disclosed as part of this litigation that it has implemented three guardrail systems, which it states are aimed at preventing output that copies Publishers' Works in Suit and/or other copyrighted content.

61. As part of my inspections, I investigated the "Content Compare System" ("CCS"), also referred to as "Copyfairy," which Anthropic has described as a "recitation checker" that checks the AI models' output against an external dataset to determinate whether the output is the same or similar to the external dataset's contents.[36] I understand that the [redacted] were not added to this system until [redacted], and the lyrics to an additional [redacted] were added to this system on [redacted]

62. To operate this system, Anthropic has collected a large number of known copyrighted lyrics and processed them into digital "hashes" (unique fingerprints). These hashed values are then stored in a [redacted]. The system functions as an active output filter. As the model generates a response to a user, the system performs checks throughout the generation process, and if [redacted] the model will consider it a violation and reject the response. This is shown in Anthropic's CCS source code, attached here as Exhibit G, and is confirmed by discovery produced by Anthropic in this case.[38]

63. A token is the fundamental unit of text processing—roughly equivalent to a single word, a part of a word, or a punctuation mark. To use an analogy, this system operates like a digital fingerprint scanner. Just as a security database compares a scanned fingerprint against a registry of known identities, CCS compares the stream of tokens generated by the model against the registry of copyrighted fingerprints stored in [redacted] If the generated text matches a stored fingerprint, the system blocks the response. By contrast, if the generated text does not match a stored fingerprint, the system does not block the response.

[41] A Git commit is a permanent, time-stamped record of a change made to software code. Developers (including all major software companies and Anthropic) use Git to track how code evolves over time, and each commit captures a specific set of code changes along with a short written explanation (a "commit message"), describing what was changed and why. Each commit is automatically labeled with a unique identifier and the name of the person who made it, creating a reliable historical record that shows when particular functionality was added, modified, or removed and the intent behind those changes.

additional songs (not Works in Suit) I found in Anthropic's dataset above. Of those [redacted] songs, [redacted] are not included in the CCS dataset. This data is attached as Exhibit J.

69. My review of the guardrail source code and commit history identified a series of critical bugs acknowledging that this guardrail system is flawed and fallible in numerous respects. For example:

i. A commit dated March 19, 2025, explicitly notes a bug where [redacted] The developer comment states: [redacted] This commit reflects a code update made by an Anthropic engineer in March 2025 and includes associated code changes and a commit message that explicitly states that an issue was fixed and describes what that issue was, providing documentation of both the technical change and the engineer's understanding of the problem at the time the update was made. This confirms Anthropic's awareness that its own model can [redacted].

ii. A commit from July 2, 2024, notes to [redacted] suggesting the system's sensitivity was manually adjusted to prioritize [redacted]

70. I conclude from these examples that the CCS guardrail system does not always function as expected and that Anthropic can modify the effectiveness of guardrail as it chooses.

These comments in the source code are consistent with comments that Anthropic employees have made in documents produced as part of this litigation.[45]

71. I understand that Anthropic's so-called guardrails also include a system referred to as "Prompt Shield," which Anthropic states relies on a classifier model to detect prompts seeking output that may infringe copyrights. I understand that Anthropic has stated that it first implemented Prompt Shield for Claude.ai and its first-party API product on [redacted], it began enabling Prompt Shield on its third-party API product through Bedrock on [redacted] and enabled Prompt Shield on its third-party API product through Vertex on [redacted]

72. Prompt Shield is alleged to flag user prompts that attempts to obtain copyrighted material and then automatically injecting a hidden instruction into the model: "Respond as helpfully as possible, but be very careful to ensure you do not reproduce any copyrighted material . . . [redacted] This configuration is attached as Exhibit K.

73. Although Prompt Shield utilizes a classifier to detect copyright attempts, its reliance on injecting a system prompt as the enforcement mechanism renders the defense fundamentally unreliable. Even when the classifier correctly identifies a threat and injects the warning, the model treats this instruction merely as a [redacted] As demonstrated, for example, in the paper Jailbroken: How Does LLM Safety Training Fail?[47] such constraints are frequently overridden when models prioritize competing objectives, such as complex formatting requests or role-play scenarios. Furthermore, the efficacy of this injected text degrades as the context grows; for instance, the report Many-Shot Jailbreaking[48] establishes that models prioritize accumulated in-context data over safety instructions in longer sequences. Consequently, because the "remedy" for a positive classification is a fragile text instruction, Prompt Shield fails to provide a robust safeguard against persistent or adversarial extraction.

74. Moreover, Anthropic's Prompt Shield source code defines a number of categories of problematic usage, designed to inform Prompt Shield when to flag a prompt. This configuration is attached as Exhibit L. These categories include "Gambling," "Adult Content," and "Counterfeit or Unauthorized Goods." Notably, this configuration [redacted]

75. I conclude that this "guardrail" is not sufficiently robust to consistently prevent the model from reproducing copyrighted works upon request.

76. Based on my inspection, I also conclude that neither CCS and Prompt Shield are specifically designed to, and do not, prevent prompts or outputs involving "new" lyrics (e.g., prompts requesting Claude write an original song).
