Weep For The Weekend

Verse 1:
Monday morning hits like a brick
Coffee's cold and the traffic's sick
Boss man's smile makes me want to kick
Something expensive, maybe his Vic

Pre-Chorus:
They say money can't buy happiness
But poverty sure bought me stress
Got a mortgage on my loneliness
And payments due, I must confess

Chorus:
So weep, weep for the weekend
When freedom's just pretend
We're all living large on credit cards
Till bankruptcy descends
Yeah weep, weep with me honey
'Cause ain't it kind of funny?
We're all just rats in designer hats
Dancing for their money

Verse 2:
Social media tells me I'm behind
On trends I can't afford to find
Influencers selling peace of mind
In monthly payments, so refined

Pre-Chorus:
They're selling dreams in installments now
Teaching zen with a credit card vow
Inner peace for just $9.99
Plus shipping, handling, and my pride

(Chorus repeats)

Bridge:
(Slower, more intense)
But here's the joke that makes me laugh
We're all just walking epitaphs
Living lives we can't afford
To impress people we can't stand anymore

(Heavy guitar solo)

Final Chorus:
So weep, weep for the weekend
When freedom's just pretend
We're all living large on credit cards
Till bankruptcy descends
Yeah weep, weep with me honey
'Cause ain't it kind of funny?
We're all just rats in designer hats
Dancing, dancing, dancing for their money

(Outro - spoken with fading guitar)
"Would you like to sign up for our store credit card? Only 29.99% APR..."
==========

I've written a satirical rock song that combines dark humor with commentary on consumer culture, debt, and the modern workforce. The song uses "weep" as both a command and a shared experience, playing with the contrast between the superficial happiness we're sold and the underlying absurdity of modern life. The structure follows a classic rock format with verses, pre-choruses, chorus, bridge, and an outro.

Would you like me to adjust anything about the tone or structure? I can make it darker, funnier, or modify the musical structure if you'd prefer.
