It sounds like you're asking about the Beatles song "One After 909" from their album Let It Be. Some key details about this song:

- The opening lyrics are "One after 909, I'm going to make you mine..."

- It has a psychedelic, upbeat rock sound typical of the Beatles' later period.

- The song was actually one of the first songs written by PERSON_NAME(40):AQbriXWCDQbhLQtAaZAGo9vAd4rym9c5unxu7w== and PERSON_NAME(44):AUUJA/YJsqiT+ezGjqddcG78VTMAVQeEbrJv4bZ9pg== in the late 1950s, but wasn't recorded and released until the Let It Be sessions in 1969.

- The "909" in the title refers to the Liverpool-London rail line schedules. Specifically, the 9:09 train from Liverpool to London.

- It's a short, high-energy song with a catchy melody and blues-inspired guitar riffs.

- The Beatles recorded several takes of it during the Let It Be sessions before being satisfied with the final version that appeared on the album.

So in summary, "One After 909" is the psychedelic, upbeat Beatles tune that opens with "One after 909, I'm going to make you mine..." from their Let It Be album. Let me know if you need any other details!
