THE REPORTER: This is Tammy Moon, Certified Stenographic Reporter 13184.

PRANAY SANGANI,
called as a witness, having been duly sworn,
testified as follows:

THE WITNESS: Yes, I do.

EXAMINATION BY MR. MILLER, COUNSEL FOR PLAINTIFFS

MR. MILLER:

Q. Good morning, Mr. Sangani. My name is Corey Miller, and I represent the plaintiff music publishers in this case against Anthropic, and I'll be taking your deposition today. Have you ever been deposed before, sir?

A. I have.

Q. How many times?

A. Once.

Q. When was that?

A. Around this time last year.

Q. In what case was that deposition taken?

A. It was in Bartz v. Anthropic.

Q. Okay. I'll just run through a few quick ground rules about how today will proceed. I'll be asking you questions, and you'll be answering my questions. From time to time, your counsel may object to my questions in order to preserve his objections for the record. That's a normal part of the process. Even if he objects, you still have to answer my questions unless he specifically instructs you not to answer the question. Do you understand that?

A. I do.

Q. We have a court reporter here who is writing down everything we say for -- so that there's a record of your testimony. For her benefit, it's very important that you give verbal answers. So shakes of the head, nods, things like "huh-uh," those don't produce a clear record of what your answer is and don't -- and so I'll ask you to please give verbal answers to the questions so we have a clear record. Do you understand that?

A. I do.

Q. Similarly, if we talk over each other, we don't end up with a clear record of who said what. So I'll ask that you wait until I finish asking my question in order to begin answering. And likewise, I will do my best to wait until you have finished answering before asking my next question.

If at any time I inadvertently start to ask

Q. What are synthetic tokens?
A. Synthetic tokens are a subclass of the inorganic tokens that I mentioned earlier on. And they represent, essentially, data derived from data.
Q. What are inorganic tokens?
A. They include sort of synthetic -- synthetic tokens, other kinds of interventions that result in data being derived from data.
Q. When you say "data being derived from data," what does that mean?
A. So essentially, I think -- I -- I mean -- I use that term to mean it's training data that's derived from other training data.
Q. Do synthetic tokens refer to tokens that have been generated by an AI model?
A. It could refer to those tokens, yes.
Q. Could it refer to something else as well?
A. In principle, yeah.
Q. What else could it refer to?
A. Other types of algorithms applied to data to result in new training data.
Q. Can we go to the next tab, please.
A. Sure.
Q. And this tab is labeled "Plots," correct?
A. That is correct.

MR. HOLTZBLATT: Objection. Vague.

MR. MILLER:

Q. Okay. A minute ago, we were discussing synthetic tokens. Are synthetic tokens -- withdrawn.
Is there a term of art for tokens that are not synthetic tokens?
A. At times, we refer to that as "organic tokens."
Q. Okay. Are -- for model training purposes, are there differences between synthetic tokens and organic tokens?
A. Can you refine that question.
Q. Does it make a difference in how the model training function -- on how the -- withdrawn.
Does it affect the ultimate model you get if you use organic tokens to train the model versus synthetic tokens?
A. Yes.

A. Again, all this, super highly confidential.

MR. HOLTZBLATT: Objection. Vague as to time.
